

Tyne Morgan

Tyne Morgan is doing what she calls her "dream job." Growing up in Lexington, Mo., she has generations of agriculture rooted in her blood. Through public speaking and various FFA contest teams, she plunged into broadcast at the young age of 16, working for the local radio station KMZU in Carrollton, Mo. Her broadcast career continued throughout college.

Tyne attended the University of Missouri-Columbia where she majored in Agricultural Journalism, with an emphasis in broadcast, graduating in 2008.

After spending two years on the road as AgDay and U.S. Farm Report National Reporter, Tyne was named the first female Host of U.S. Farm Report in 2014. She's only the fourth host of the show, following Orion Samuelson, Max Armstrong and John Phipps.

Today, Tyne views it not only as an honor, but also a major responsibility to carry on such a strong legacy of the show, while also providing the latest news and information in a way that connects with her audience. As she continues to take a deep dive into the news and issues farmers are facing today, Tyne also enjoys sharing stories from across rural America that showcase the grit and tenacity that is hallmark to agriculture's success. She's an award-winning agricultural journalist, receiving NAFB's prestigious Doan Award twice, most recently in 2022. Tyne understands what matters most to farmers, ranchers and rural America, because that's where she lives is raising her family.

More important than any title she holds today, is her title of “Mom.” Tyne, along with her husband James, are raising their two daughters in a rural Missouri community. They’re reminded daily of the importance of rural towns, volunteering with several local organizations. She says raising their daughters in a rural community is something she cherishes and truly appreciates.

